Can the Cry of Pain Model Provide a Better Understanding ...

The cry of pain hypothesis (Williams, 1997) was proposed as a psychological model of suicidal behaviour extending existing theories of escape (Baumeister, 1990) and arrested flight (Gilbert & Allan, 1998). The CoP model views suicidal behaviour as a behavioural response to a stressful situation with three components which interact to increase suicidal risk, namely: (1) the presence of defeat, (2) no escape or entrapment, and (3) no rescue. The idea then is that suicidal behaviour

The cry of pain hypothesis (Pollock & Williams, 2001; Williams, 2001) is a psychological model of suicidal behavior that extends existing theories of escape (Baumeister, 1990) and arrested flight (Gilbert & Allan, 1998). The model conceptualizes suicidal behavior as the response (the cry) to a situation that has three components: defeat, no escape and no rescue. In this study, the model was tested empirically in a case control study, by comparing suicidal patients and matched hospital
