What Jopling offers as a potential explanation is what is known as placebo effects, nocebo effects, Barnum effects, and other phenomena that account for anomalous successes in psychodynamic psychotherapeutic treatment. Without empirical verifiability to back up the claims of psychodynamic psychotherapy theories, Jopling is free to attribute the success of therapies, in general, to such

Talking Cures and Placebo Effects contests this view. It defends the unpopular hypothesis that therapeutic changes in the psychodynamic psychotherapies are sometimes functions of powerful placebos that rally the mind's native healing powers in much the same way that placebo pills rally the body's native healing powers; and that psychodynamic insights and interpretations are themselves placebos.
