THE DREAM by Drew D. Hansen | Kirkus Reviews
A Rhodes scholar in theology, Hansen, born the year after that 1963 event in Washington, D.C., first revisits the 1960s, with snapshots of the burgeoning civil-rights landscape. In three southern states, for example, no black child attended an integrated school; in the 100 counties of the South with the highest ratio of African-American population, fewer than nine percent of nonwhites were

The Dream Drew D. Hansen Drew D. Hansen, parses virtually every sentence, with a side-by-side comparison of the speech as it was drafted, as it was written, and as it was delivered. The analysis uncovers the Biblical, historical and intellectual roots of King's phrasing, and it shows that the speech was largely a combination of favorite set Hansen shows how King's memory has been sanitized and rendered harmless by linking him exclusively with the "I Have a Dream" speech. In opposing the Jim Crow laws, a main (but not the only) point of the speech, King targeted a system that was abhorrent to Northern whites and a source of shame to many in the South.

The Dream is really more of an examination of the I have a dream speech itself. Hansen discusses the improvisational portions of the speech, along with looking at the ways in which MLK sets the speech up as a sermon.

The dream for me would be to have a csv file that had the frequency in MHz in one column and the dBm measurement in the next. In a text editor the .csv would read: 240.000, -95.0 240.252, -105.0 240.504, -98.0 240.757, -103.0 and then continue to the last frequency sampled. Is an addition to the program like this possible?

Thanks!
